

Retirement Planning:
Think RRSPs are your best retirement option?

Search Stories

Stories by Category

October 19, 2005

Home   Advertise   Contact

PACIFIC MINING CONFERENCE - Philippines open for business

10/19/2005

By Richard Mills

MANILA - Just a year ago, no one would have imagined Philippines as the site for this year's Asia Pacific Mining Conference. But last week it happened, bringing to Manila many of the most senior mining leaders of Asia.

The country used to be one of the largest mineral producers in the world, but years of abuse has left the industry in tatters. There have been no new mines for the past 30 years, that is, until just the past few months.

A new mining law has made the industry in Philippines viable once again. According to the government, Philippines is open for business. Politicians, judges and government officials were present in large numbers to provide smiles and rosy assurances to the hundreds of foreign delegates attending the annual conference.

Mining executives were not quite as optimistic as the politicians, but the overall tone was certainly positive and a big change from just one year ago. Understandably, the companies with the most positive messages about Philippines were those experiencing the most success.

Andrew McIlwain, CEO of LAFAYETTE MINING, declared his company's project as the "first greenfield development in 30 years." Pouring of gold had already begun and full production was said to be only another month or so away. John Ridsdel, country manager of TVI PACIFIC, says his company is planning an expansion to increase its production.

Jim Askew, chairman of CLIMAX MINING, proudly announced that the day before, his company had been awarded its permit to operate, and it would proceed with its large development plans for its gold deposits. In addition, work would continue with its large exploration assets.

Tony Robbins, managing director of INDPHIL RESOURCES, was similarly positive. He described his company's copper-gold deposits in Philippines as probably the seven or eight largest in the world.

Nick Sheard, VP exploration of INCO, also provided a riveting speech about his company's projects. Most of his presentation was focused on the Asia Pacific region but he expressed pointed optimism about Philippines.

While there was much to be upbeat about, some people expressed cautious words about operating in a country with a long history of antagonism toward mining.

Patrick Waters, the president of ANGLO AMERICAN EXPLORATION PHILIPPINES, cited problems in many areas. He said that while there is strong support at the national level of government, this rhetoric is often not transferred to the local level. Local communities are often easily influenced by anti-mining non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and militant church leaders. Corruption and red tape is another hindrance, as is gaining access to adjacent sites because of uncertain and sometimes arbitrary regulatory and legal structures.

PRINTER VERSION

EMAIL ARTICLE TO A FRIEND

COMMENT ON THIS ARTICLE

Related Items

Companies

- Anglo American plc
- Climax Mine
- Inco Limited
- Placer Dome Inc
- TVI Pacific Inc

Articles

- Australasia and Europe
- Environment and Sustainable Development
- Opinions, Events and Publications

Given the alternatives and the current sense of commitment by the government, it seems that the Philippine mining industry will gradually continue to improve its position. That is, as long as there are no changes.

(Richard Mills, CFA and chairman of the executive search firm Chalré Associates, is based in Manila where he attended the Pacific Mining Conference and filed this special report for CMJ. Contact him at rmills@chalre.com.)

Back to headlines | Email this article to a friend | Comment on this article

---

Home | Feedback | Contact Us
© 2005 Business Information Group

This site is best viewed with Internet Explorer